NEVADA MINERS ICE BOUND IN BEHRING SEA

Nevada. So we went and towed them in. I standing at the wheel. I had the hood of my parka up around my face so that they could not tell who I was. As I was turning around to see if the tow line was holding I could see the boys from Copper Canyon walking up and down the deck of the Casco. There I could see Ed Blake, many years foreman, and also Carl, the superintendent for Jim Dahl, so after they had dropped the anchor we ran along side of them and tied up and went on board the Casco. I said, Hello, boys; when did you leave San Francisco? What are you doing here with a two masted schooner with out any power? Then they recognized me. Then they told me McQuirk, the promoter, and the first mate had gone ashore in a small boat. In the meantime a blow came up. The ice broke one of the anchors and the other was dragging and would not hold, so they had to pull out to save themselves from being wrecked. That is the time we pulled them in.

"Two of the boys took a small gasoline launch from the Casco and went down the coast about fifty miles looking for the boys. They had landed at a native village, and when the boys arrived there they learned that the whaler Herman had picked them up and transferred them to the revenue cutter Bear and brought them to Nome. They never joined the expedition after that. At Cape Search three more of the boys left the Casco and came to Nome on the Belvedere. Then we left and went up the coast trading about fifty miles to Jack's place. Early in the morning I could see the Casco a long ways off with sails out. After that she went in Kalooshin bay. I did not see the Casco again until August 1st, at Cape North, and then three more of the boys had left with their outfit at Kalooshin bay, so there were twenty-one left. All the Nevada boys were still on. At that time there were four ships caught in the ice, all bound for Colma, about 600 miles further north; and the ice was just as solid as it was last winter around the cape. We were tied up to one iceberg for twenty-seven days and could not go ahead or go back. We were simply there and had to stay; there was nothing but northwest winds. It seemed like we would never get a southeast wind, which was necessary to open up the ice so that we could get out.

"The Casco was the first one to work herself out and was a whole week working out fifteen miles. She unloaded the Copper Canyon boys and one more with their outfit. Then she went down fifteen miles and unloaded five more. Ed Blake was one of them. Then she pulled out with about to naboard headed for the Cape York tin mines, to take a load of tin. The last seen of her by the Polar Bear she was in the ice about five miles off shore near Walker Rim, about 100 miles from North Cape.

"We are watching for them every day, but it looks bad for them."

"Ernest, another of Jim Dahl's men, could not get his passport from Frisco. He had his outfit on the Casco, he came to Nome on the Victoria. He and Antone Standard bought a schooner and went over to Siberia and caught the Casco there and got their outfit off. Standard is the man who owned five and six Eldorado in the Klondike in the early days. You remember when he took out millions, and now he is in Siberia starting all over again."

GRAND OPERA GIVEN IN RAIN IN MEXICO CITY

(Correspondence of Associated Press)

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 5.—The unusual spectacle was presented today of 15,000 persons sitting under their umbrellas in Mexico City's famous bull ring listening to Enrico Caruso, wearing a heavy rubber cape as protection against the rain, sing the role of "Don Jose" in "Carmen." It was a picturesque setting for this opera in a bull ring, which until a few years ago attracted the world's best matadors and picadores.

The performance started under dark skies and during the third act a heavy rain began falling. At the end of the act the management announced that because of the rain the performance would be suspended. Fifteen thousand persons rose in their seats and shouted in opposition until the arena shook. They demanded that the opera proceed and inasmuch as by this time the rain had ceased the fourth act was started and completed, although occasional flashes of lightning and occasional clouds forecast the storm that broke shortly after the finale.

Next in popularity to Caruso was Gabrielle Benazoni, Italian contralto, who sang "Carmen." Mme. Benazoni makes her debut this fall with the Metropolitan Opera company in New York.

It's all in the point of view—if it's your point of view.

Life is a great struggle but after all life may be a greater.

Love means sacrifice but a lot of people seem to think it means money.

When a sheep was being shorn on an Australian farm a starling's nest with one egg was found in its wool.

A modern idea of a good provider is the man who provides so well for his family he hasn't anything left for himself on a rainy day.

"I had a good chance to get in with Pete Brokonoff, a Russian fur dealer. I knew him in Nome for years. He has been in Siberia quite a few years and made lots of money. He is rich. His partner was ninety miles up the coast. He was supposed to come down with 100 white fox but he had not shown up when we left. He had thirty-five tons of trading goods and had ten tons more further down to bring up, so he wanted me to stay with him, but I was only supposed to make that trip. That was the orders from the customs house otherwise the owner of the boat was liable to a fine. If I had or could have stayed with him I am positive we could have gathered up 1,500 fox at about $25 each and would sell on the outside around $50 each. Silverman took my place. He is a Russian Jew and a bright fellow. He is a partner of the Nevada boys, so if they can't find any gold they can catch foxes. Silver mines in Nevada are not in it with catching foxes. The trader, Belvedere, bought 1,100 sable, costing from $50 to $300 apiece. He also got about 3,000 foxes, amounting to about $500,000."

FRENCH STABLE BOYS OUT ON A STRIKE

(Correspondence of Associated Press)
PARIS, Oct. 1.—Demands of the stable boys at the Fafite, Chantilly and Longchamp racetracks to enforce which they declared a strike, were for fifteen francs a day with food, one per cent of stakes won by the charges they cared for, four hours work on Sunday and one day off each month. Racing has stopped at some of the tracks because the owners rejected these demands.
